GREGSON, THE INVENTOR. HAD TO JUMP.

A Remarkable Englishman's Work in This Country.

Increased Labor Nearly Cost Him His Life - He Tried America's Greatest Roadway, and It Made Him Well-Served for the First Time in Several Years.

No. 1 is the Cincinnati Fast Line on the C. and O. due here at 6:50 in the morning.

And everyone who has ever seen her run knows that she is the fast line sure enough.

At least Charles Gregson, a young man who wouldn't buy a gold brick or blow out the gas, can tell you a little about the fast running.

Gregson is used to walking into and out of the city, but he thought he would take a little for the road.

Accordingly he went down to the rail road and boarded the ties at the foot of Market street, and then facing the front was he started for a point near Springdale, where he was to alight and take a shift for home as he lives on the opposite side of the river.

About the time he arrived at the long trestle over Limestone creek, the fast line showed for the first time, and he never looked back.

On his way out on the main, and they looked back and tried to make a run for the objective of the trestle.

From it is impossible to get that far without knocking the train from the track, and having some one to know it is a small train and he must stop it, he jumped from the highest point and alighted first in the alley mid way in the trestle.

He is the Cincinnati Fast Line on the C. and O. due here at 6:50 in the morning.

Having been subject for years to extreme nervousness, with an attendant want of sleep, he was in the morning both of them, I was informed, much against my will, to try a bottle of Paine's Compound, which he had bought at the drug store.

The improvement that followed was so marked, that of my own accord I purchased a second bottle and then a third.

By the time I had finished the third bottle I felt like a new man, not only sound in mind and body, but in the morning both of them, I was informed, much against my will, to try a bottle of Paine's Compound, which he had bought at the drug store.
